

2006-07 Annual Report

Saving local organic farmland forever

PCC Farmland Trust
secures, preserves, and stewards threatened farmland in the Northwest, to ensure that generations of local farmers productively farm it using sustainable,
organic growing methods.

Dear friends,

Local organic food is going mainstream as a wider community becomes aware of the issues surrounding the current food industry. Demand is increasing for healthy food in our schools and neighborhoods. People want the freshest food possible and they want to know their farmers. They don't want contaminated food from China, and they don't want to use excessive fuel to transport it thousands of miles. Simply put, more and more people are recognizing the need for good, clean food grown close to home.

Since 1999 you have been on the forefront, along with the PCC Farmland Trust, to save threatened farmland and keep it in active, organic production. We are heartened to see the wider community embracing this movement because as the population increases, so too will the demand for high-quality land. Through your generous support, the Trust is meeting the need to save more farms through capacity building, long-term planning and additional staffing. This year we have collaborated with like-minded organizations and local governments to secure funding available from Washington State's Farmland Preservation Program. We are hopeful that we will preserve additional quality acreage in the very near future.

Our work is so vital because of timely issues such as food security, climate change, and the availability and cost of oil. Thank you for your continuing and loyal support; it has been essential in our joint efforts to ensure our own food security, support our local growers, and keep the land alive for future generations.

To good food and the soil that creates it,

Randy Lee
Board President

2006-07 Accomplishments

In 2006 we saw the addition of our third farm, Ames Creek, in Carnation. Three families farm this 178-acre, formerly fallow land. Andrew Stout of Full Circle Farm purchased 127 acres from the Trust, Michaele Blakely of Growing Things Farm leases 31 acres, and Phong Cha of Children's Garden Farm leases 20 acres. PCC Farmland Trust owns the organic, agricultural easement on the entire property.

Another exciting event in 2006 was the presentation of the annual Vim Wright Stewardship Award to Nash Huber and his dedicated crew at Nash's Organic Produce in Sequim. Launched by local farming advocacy group Farming and the Environment, the award recognizes Washington state producers who are providing exemplary stewardship of soil, water, air and wildlife habitat.

For the Trust, 2007 was a year of bold growth. The Board adopted a strategic plan to save "Five Farms in Five Years." Our main strategy to save farms is acquisition of conservation easements, either purchased by the Trust or donated by a farmer. These easements restrict future development, assure sustainable organic agricultural practices, and bring down the cost of the land. The Trust or individual farmers can own the land with the attached perpetual conservation easement.

Also, 2007 brought the addition of two new staff people — a development and communications director and an office administrator — as well as a new office space to accommodate our growth.

We worked extensively with the King County Agricultural Program on our Ames Creek Farm in East King County. Because of flooding in 2006, we facilitated completion of an elevated "critter pad," which allows placement of animals and equipment above the 100-year flood elevation. We also worked with Pierce County Planning and Land Services Department on acquisition of a conservation easement on the 100-acre Orting Valley Farm. This property has been farmed for 45 years by the same family and has the potential for up to five farmers to operate.

We held many successful community events. In March 2007, we had over 100 people join us at Joel Huesby's ranch in Walla Walla. Joel and his family operate Thundering Hooves at Bennington Place, a cattle and poultry operation providing grass-fed products to local markets and restaurants. PCC Farmland Trust saved Bennington Place in 2003 from "ranchette" development, which enabled the Huesbys to nearly double their land base.

In April 2007, the Trust teamed up with Stewardship Partners and 30 Trust volunteers to plant the north bank of Ames Creek, which meanders through the Ames Creek Farm before converging with a bend in the Snoqualmie River.

In September 2007, we had over 600 people join us at Ames Creek for the King County Harvest Celebration Tour. The day included free PCC Cooks demonstrations and samples (using fresh farm produce), hay rides, a mini-farmers market, and the opportunity to meet the farmers and learn about their operations.

Three new Board members were added in 2007 — Pamela Coleman, an organic inspector who works for the Washington State Department of Agriculture in Wenatchee and inspects farms on the east-side of the Cascades; Carol James, a citizen activist with over 20 years of experience, which includes being a founding member of Cascade Land Conservancy and the King County Farmland Preservation program; and Dave Lamont, a CEO of a commercial real estate firm, with extensive experience in land transactions and a passion for organic foods and farming.

Looking Ahead — Projects for 2008

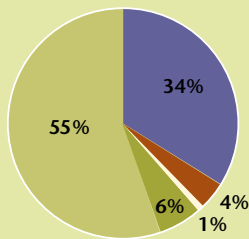

- Building a “Farmland Sustaining Circle” of donors willing to pledge $1,000 or more annually to support ongoing operations, farmland research, stewardship and outreach efforts.
- Working with PCC Natural Markets’ suppliers to expand our Vendor Partner program.
- Beginning a Restaurant Partnership program to link restaurants that purchase local food from our farmers with people who want to eat locally.
- The monies from the three programs mentioned above will enable the Trust to have reliable, sustainable funding sources that provide long-term financial security for the organization.
- Creating a new PCC Farmland Trust brochure.
- Seeking corporate sponsorships to offset the cost of farm tours and other events.
- Continuing to offer farm tours and educational ventures on our farms for people interested in saving farmland. Our next tour is on Saturday, September 27 at the Ames Creek Farm in Carnation as part of the King County Harvest Celebration Tour.
- Hiring a new staff member to support farmland research and stewardship of properties.
- Seeking farmers for our next property who are committed to organic, sustainable growing practices and serving the local community.

And, as always, saving threatened Northwest farmland and keeping it in organic, sustainable production. We are currently working on farms in Pierce, Thurston, Kittitas and Snohomish counties. There is much more work to be done, including stewardship of our existing properties, building a database of farmers ready for farming, and outreach to the wider community. THANK YOU for your continued dedication to this movement and your many layers of support for PCC Farmland Trust. Generations to come will reap the benefits of our work to save threatened farmland and keep it producing good food.

PCC FARMLAND TRUST

“The PCC Farmland Trust’s purchase of the 97-acre Delta Farm in 2001 was the lifeblood our farm needed. They took the first step to stabilize our land base, and spurred others on to do similar work.

It gave us and the farm a future.”

— Nash Huber, owner of Nash’s Organic Produce, who leases approximately 400 acres in the Sequim area.
